CLEANING UP

The old castle shuddered and rumbled and dust poured out of all thirteen hundred and thirteen windows, as Mr. and Mrs. J. Evil Scientist went about their annual house cleaning of the old place.

"This time we're getting rid of a lot of old, worthless items," shouted J. Evil as they stood in his workshop.

"J. Evil, you're not throwing me out, are you?" cried Goonda, his be-witching wife.

"No, no! But I am throwing out this fan I invented that blows only hot air, this do-it-yourself Frankenstein kit, and all these other horrible old inventions of mine."

"Dear, you mean you're sick of horrible inventions?"

"No," laughed J. Evil, sadistically, "I just want room to build new ones."

And with that they proceeded to Goonda's tower...her broom following faithfully.

Up in Goonda's tower they began tossing out some of the evil devices that no longer caught her fancy.

Three torture racks, sixteen pounds of imitation cobwebs, a set of matching mixing cauldrons, assorted warts — easy to apply, his and her guillotines, chains, bones... these were just a few of the items that went flying out the window.

They were interrupted in their work when Junior rushed into the room. He wanted fifty cents to go to the movies.

"I just gave you your allowance yesterday," yelled J. Evil. "When I was your age I didn't spend all my money foolishly."

"Pop, that was six hundred years ago! Things were a lot cheaper then," replied his astute young son.

"But you must learn the value of money. I will advance you fifty cents on next week's allowance if you haul all that junk your mother and I have tossed out down to the junk yard," J. Evil told Junior.

Junior sighed. If there was one thing he liked, it was getting out of work. But he liked a monster movie even more.

So, a short time later, Junior was on his way to the junk yard, his wagon piled high with his parents' discarded items.

Not far from the junk yard the Mammoth-Giant-Monster Picture Company was about to shoot its latest film. The actors were all in costume and sitting around an open set that was supposed to be a meeting place for witches.

"Bah! This place looks more like a kindergarten than a spooky spot," shouted the director. "It wouldn't scare a ten-year-old kid. We need realism... some real witchy stuff to scatter around."

"They're no such things as real witches," grumbled one actor.

"Momma wouldn't like it if she heard you say that," yelled Junior, as he passed by the movie set hauling his wagon load.

The director's eyes lit up when he saw what was in the wagon and he eagerly ran over to Junior.

"Wow! Look at all that stuff! It would sure look great in my movies. How much do you want for it? Just name a price."

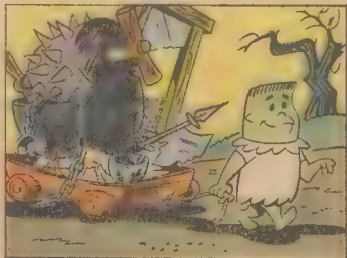

"Three billion dollars," replied Junior.

"Name another price," said the director.

"Ninety-two dollars and a lifetime pass to your movies," said Junior.

"It's a deal," answered the director.

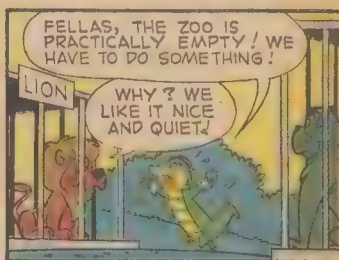

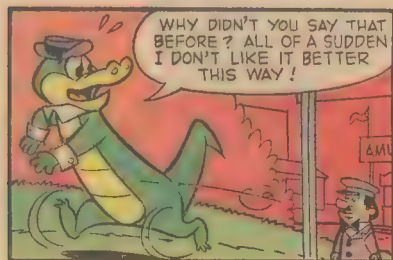

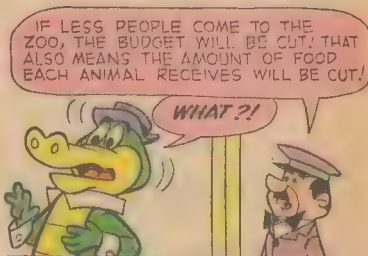

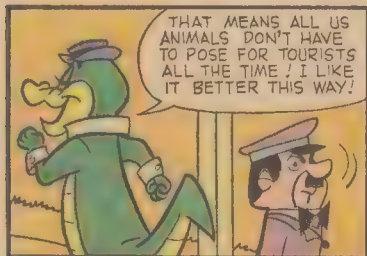

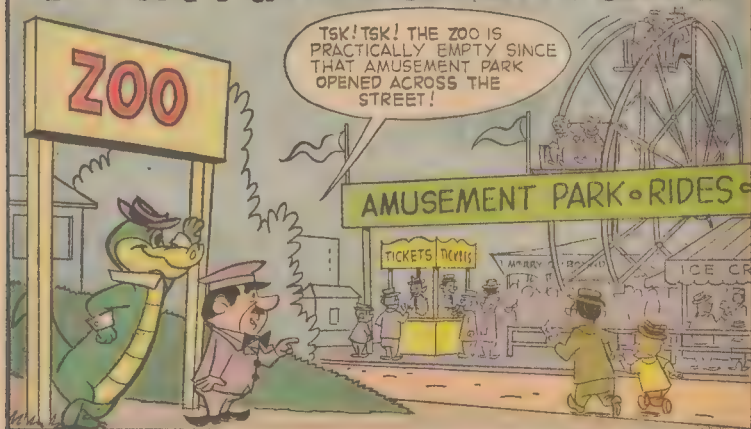

So Junior went home with a pocket full of cash and he never had to ask his parents for a loan again. All he had to do was wait for them to throw out some more junk!
